New Developments in Floating Production Systems

19 September 2006

Lectures 18.00 hrs Cheese & Wine 19.30

Lecture Theatre 208 Skempton Building, Imperial College of Science, Technology & Medicine, Exhibition Road, South Kensington, London SW7 (behind the Science Museum)

Chairman: Richard Luff, Intec Engineering

Presenter 1: Andrew Clayson, VP Business Development, Advanced Production and Loading

Presenter 2: Fredrik Major, VP Business Development, Sevan Marine ASA

Despite there being no new floating production units in the UK over the past few years, the stage is set for a new generation of FPSO's. The exploitation of marginal fields allied to developments in floater technology has led to lower cost units suited to today's economic environment.

The presentations this evening are from two of the most innovative companies in the business and will highlight some of the advances made in recent years.

The first presentation is by APL and looks at the various internal, fixed and disconnectable turret systems available and how differing systems are suited to a variety of field requirements.

The second presentation concerns a novel FPSO design which has been ordered for the Chestnut field by Venture Production as well as Petrobras for their Piranema field. The presentation will demonstrate the benefits of an efficient hull design which eliminates the need for a turret and swivel and how the system can be adapted for drilling.
